1

The science of making and de-coding secret messages is called cryptology. A scientist who does this is called a cryptologist. Companies, organisations and the military use secret messages every day to protect their messages from others.

2

The ancient Spartans in Greece were the first to use secret messages over 2000 years ago. In ancient Rome, Julius Caesar used secret messages to write to his friends. During World War Two (1939-1945), US Marines sent radio messages using a secret language (the Navajo language) that was impossible for their enemies to understand!

3

We use codes to protect the information on our computers. We can use codes for documents, network space, and e-mail messages. The new types of codes are very advanced, and sometimes complicated...but, the basic idea is still the same as the ancient codes!

Cross-curricular sections to encourage pupils to use English to talk about other subject areas.
